Divine dating site singapore There are a variety of reasons why Singaporeans are celebrating Valentine's Day — people often get romantic feelings if they find a worthwhile partner and will show the love in the most unusual ways. According to a similar survey done in 2016, 80 percent of Singaporeans say they prefer shopping and going out to do something nice for their partner. However, there is no denying that Valentine's Day is an internationally recognized date and that there are some local ways to celebrate it. This is not the first time Singapore's love stories have been featured in local newspapers, and that's because a lot of people take online dating in Singapore seriously, with the best amongst them getting to meet at social events — including the annual National Day Parade. In other parts of the world, Valentine's Day has taken on a different meaning, with the holiday now being celebrated as a day to express love and appreciation. Singaporeans who like to explore new places can also engage in unique Valentine's Day activities, such as taking an overnight trip to New Year's Island. But one day doesn't seem to be enough for everyone who wants to enjoy the holiday, so it's likely that Singaporeans will be out in droves to do just that in the near future. Singapore's love stories don't necessarily have to be experienced overseas
